| 10.1.5 | Hereos Of Their Own Lives | Gordon, Linda | History of family violence, from its discovery in 1870 through the 1960's, is based on a new source for historians--the case records of social work agencies. As she investigates child abuse, child neglect, wife-beating, and incest, Gordon shows that it is not the existence of family violence that has changed, but society's attitude toward it. In addition, she allows the poignant case histories to speak for themselves. Amidst the sadness she finds many women, men, and children involved with family violence who are nevertheless true "heroes of their own lives," refusing to abandon either their attempts to escape poverty and violence or their struggles for better lives. |
